

Day at Biltmore May Net $30,000 for Charity Work

Women of Society Who Ran Hotel Raise Huge Sum to Help Fight Disease.

While the accounts of the twenty committees that operated the Biltmore Hotel for the benefit of the Society for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis during the active hours of Monday had not been checked up yesterday it was made evident to Miss Ruth Vanderbilt "Twombles" and Mrs. Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr., president and treasurer of the beneficiary, that the net income for the society would be about $30,000, with a possibility that the sum would be exceeded.

The computation is being made by a firm of certified accountants, which yesterday was considering an adjustment between the hotel management and the committees of the society that took over the hotel departments twenty-two hours out of Monday's twenty-four. One of many interesting statistics brought out concerned tips received by the amateur waitresses, which ranged from $500 to $1,200 an hour during meal times.

THE PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

The Philharmonic Society's fourth Tuesday evening concert at the Metropolitan Opera House took place last night. The program was a fine one, and the conductor, Mr. Walter Damrosch, gave a most excellent performance. The orchestra was superb, and the soloists were of high caliber. The concert was well attended, and the audience was most appreciative.

CASALS WITH LETZ QUARTET IN BRAHMS AND SCHUBERT Cellist Joins Musicians for Notable Program at Third Concert of Series.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

The third subscription concert of the Letz Quartet took place last evening in Aeolian Hall. It was promised that David Stanley Smith's "Gregorian Quartet," produced at the Pittsfield Chamber Music Festival last fall, would be performed for the first time in this city; but for some reason not made public it was set aside and the Brahms sextet in G major for two violins, two violas and two cellos was played. The other number on the list was Schubert's quintet for two violins, viola and two cellos. Possibly the distinguished assistance of the organization was the moving cause in the change, for the cellist added to the force of the quartet was no less a personage than the famous virtuoso Pablo Casals. The second violin player was Hugo Kortschak. Whether Prof. Smith's composition would have given pleasure to the audience or not, it is certain that the Brahms work did. This second concert of the great composer, who died in 1897, is already fifty-six years old and music lovers are well aware of the fact that only creations of genius can live that long without being forgotten.

But this piece of chamber music is perennially youthful. One might write it as Byron wrote of the sea: "Time wrings no wrinkles on thy azure brow." Its beautiful, melodic lines, its clear and logical developments and its mastery of the six instruments exhibit all the perfection of Brahms's unsurpassed chamber music.

The performance of the composition last evening was praiseworthy though not faultless. Mr. Casals is no beginner in chamber music, and as usual he identified himself admirably with the ensemble. The delivery of all the flowing and cantabile pages of the sextet by the six musicians was excellent in clarity, smoothness and balance.

But in all passages demanding largeness of tone and energy of style there were too much rudeness and opacity. Nor was the interpretation of the composition as warm and commanding as it should have been. The reading lacked spontaneity. It betrayed effort and it sounded often labored. But despite these shortcomings, the splendid value of the work was made known and the audience was moved to long continued applause.

The Schubert quintet was an appropriate sequel to the preceding work. Its simplicity in thought and construction, its felicity of modulation, furnished a pleasing contrast. No musician of today wonders at the enthusiasm with which the Schubert chamber music is received. Schubert's chamber music to the cognoscenti of his time nor the joyous praises which Schumann never tired of uttering. Altogether the concert of last evening was a most successful one.

An English section contained Purcell's "The Lullaby," Delius's "Pavane for the Infants of the World," and "The Grove" from his "The Elbow Room." "The Grove" was a most beautiful piece, which was scheduled for a first performance at the concert. It was a number entitled "The New Dawn," by Cecil Forsyth.

Mrs. Eva Gauthier, with Leroy Shield at the piano, sang two groups of songs—"Sundown" and "The Elbow Room." The first group was a most beautiful piece, which was scheduled for a first performance at the concert. It was a number entitled "The New Dawn," by Cecil Forsyth.

Isaac Townsend, 71, Dies of Pneumonia; Just Reached Nice

One of Oldest Union Club Members and a Founder of the Racquet and Tennis.

Word has reached New York of the death by pneumonia, in Nice, France, yesterday of Isaac Townsend, in his 71st year. He left New York in the middle of January for Europe and arrived in Nice two weeks ago with the intention of passing the remainder of the winter there.

Mr. Townsend, in 1872, was graduated as a civil engineer from Columbia College. He was a close friend of the late James Gordon Bennett and in turn of membership in the Union Club. He also was a founder and a former president of the Racquet and Tennis Club. He was founded the Boys' Institution at Randall's Island, which he succeeded him as head. He was also one of the founders and a life member of the New York Athletic Club.

Mr. Townsend was survived by two sisters, Mrs. Charles Adams Sackett of New London, Conn., and Mrs. George H. Bond of New York. There also are several nephews and nieces. His son, Mr. Henry Prather Fletcher, whose husband, a former Assistant Secretary of State, was recently appointed to Belgium.
